

When the Federal Reserve cut short-term interest rates to near zero on 12/16/08 during the mortgage crisis, it set the table for ultimately what was 7 years before the central bank raised rates. Longer-term interest rates followed the Fed's lead, as yields on all durations of corporate and government debt fell to historic lows that have continued well into 2020. The global pandemic forced the Fed to cut rates again to near zero (on 3/15/20), leading to last week's announcement that they expect rates to remain near zero "at least through 2023 to help support our (economic) recovery" (source: Federal Reserve).

The number of Americans receiving state unemployment benefits has almost been cut in half over the last 4 months. From 22.8 million on 5/09/20 to 12.3 million on 9/05/20, the number of jobless individuals receiving weekly benefits has dropped 46% since May. Congress continues to argue whether another bailout bill is warranted and how large it should be. The key difference of opinion between lawmakers: Democrats want to include cash for financially strapped state and local governments in addition to unemployment benefits while Republicans want the bill to focus only on individuals (source: Congress).

More Washington theatrics will play out over the next 1 ½ weeks as the political parties work to prevent a government shutdown at midnight on Wednesday 9/30/20. Lawmakers will most likely sign off on a "continuing resolution" to maintain fiscal year 2020 funding levels into fiscal year 2021 until after the 11/03/20 elections. A government shutdown would be our 4th in just the last 3 years (source: Congress).
