Stocks Bounce

Declining energy and food prices and falling bond yields signaled a potentially improving inflation outlook, buoying investor sentiment. The rally in stocks was most powerful on the first and final trading days of a holiday-shortened week. Stocks turned a bit choppy mid-week as investors digested Fed Chair Jerome Powell's Senate appearance but resumed their momentum on Thursday and rallied Friday as rate-hike expectations eased.

Though the weekly gain was a welcome respite from the market's downward trend, declining bond yields and falling food and energy prices can also be interpreted as signs of slowing economic growth, which may represent a headwind for corporate earnings in the months ahead.

Powell Testifies

Fed Chair Jerome Powell told members of the Senate Finance Committee that the Fed is committed to lowering inflation and moving quickly to do so. He conceded that a recession could result from the Fed's inflation-fighting efforts and acknowledged that some of the forces driving inflation (e.g., supply chain, war) are out of the Fed's control.⁴

Perhaps the most exciting part of his testimony was what he didn't say, which was a definitive statement on future hikes. Instead, Powell told lawmakers that he "anticipate[s] that ongoing rate increases will be appropriate." Before his testimony, the Fed published a new research paper that found a greater than 50% chance of recession in the next four quarters.⁵

Get Educated on Education Credits

Two education credits are available to American taxpayers: the American Opportunity Tax Credit (AOTC) and the Lifetime Learning Credit (LLC). The IRS has lots of information about these two credits on their site, but here are some helpful highlights:

- The AOTC is allowed for expenses for course-related books, supplies, and equipment not necessarily paid to the educational institution but needed for attendance.
- There is a four-year limit on claiming the AOTC but no limit on the number of years you can claim the LLC.
- To claim either credit, use Form 8863.
- The AOTC is worth up to $2,500.
- To claim the full credit, your modified adjusted gross income must be $80,000 or less.
