

The markets have continued to rise in June as Morningstar notes the S&P 500 up 0.99% through June 23 (+13.73% YTD). As Covid restrictions begin to ease, and end in some states, the economy should continue to grow. Inflation has been a topic of late as CPI numbers have been coming in higher than expected. However, The Fed believes these jumps are transitory and will ebb as we see more businesses get back to some sort of normal. Interest rates remain unchanged and are expected to do so until at least 2023. The big question is, can businesses fill the open staffing positions soon. I don't think I drive by any restaurant that doesn't have a "Now Hiring" sign.

Sunday, June 20 marked not only Father's Day but also the Summer Solstice (the longest day of the year). For some, it's the official start of summer. After a full year of lock downs, travel is picking up. Airlines are seeing increased traffic and cruise lines are beginning to book excursions. It will be some time before we get back to where we were in 2019 but it is good to see progress. I know we are looking to take a short trip or two this summer. Also, up next is the 4th of July. I'm seeing a number of communities that have cancelled fireworks celebrations as early as last March. We aren't sure what we will be doing as our usual destination for fireworks is one of those that has cancelled.

The 2nd quarter is nearing an end and we will soon be setting up meetings to review the 1st half of the year. I am hopeful to see more people face-to-face rather than Zooming. Along with reviews, planning updates will be on the agenda. Summer is a great time to visit your retirement/financial/tax plans to better prepare for your financial future. Set aside some time to see if any changes should be considered. If you don't have a plan, check out my scheduling site, <https://go.oncehub.com/ChuckVercellone> to setup a time to talk.

COULD A SECOND SECURE ACT TWEAK RETIREMENT RULES?

When the Setting Every Community Up for Retirement Enhancement (SECURE) Act became law in 2019, it altered retirement plan contribution and distribution rules. There may be an encore. The Securing a Strong Retirement Act of 2021, nicknamed SECURE Act 2.0, has bipartisan support on Capitol Hill, and public policy analysts widely believe it will become law either this year or next.

This new bill proposes to raise the starting age for required minimum distributions from retirement plans from 72 to 75. (The age threshold would rise gradually over a ten-year period.) The penalty for a missed RMD would be halved, from 50% to 25%. The new law would allow employers to auto-enroll workers in retirement savings plans, and let them offer small financial perks to employees to stimulate plan contributions. Employers could even adjust matching contributions in view of a plan participant's student loan burdens; if student loan payments are stopping a worker from fully funding their retirement account, the company match would be permitted to increase in response. Retirement savers aged 62 and older would have a chance to make larger catch-up contributions to retirement plans. Investment choices would broaden for certain types of retirement savings accounts. Companies with 50 or fewer workers could offset more of the start-up expenses for retirement credits using new tax credits. The bill would also authorize a nationwide lost-and-found website for old retirement plans, making it easier for people to find and make decisions with past retirement balances.<sup>1</sup>

HEALTH TIP

Try herbal teas to help clean the body of harmful microorganisms

Herbal teas (such as rooibos, chamomile, and mint) contain catechins, plant-derived chemicals that have been noted for their strong antimicrobial properties. Additionally, they do not contain caffeine.

HAVE DIGITAL HEALTH CERTIFICATE, WILL TRAVEL?

Digital health certificates – also called COVID vaccine passports – might be available for travelers this year, especially those travelers leaving the country. While U.S. retailers and resorts have been resistant to them, the situation may change this summer as Americans travel internationally and head to foreign airports to come home.

Currently, before you fly into the U.S. from another country, you have to show proof of a negative COVID-19 test result. That applies even if you are a U.S. citizen. So far, the responsibility for checking the test results has fallen to the air carriers, and with air travel increasing, some of them are calling for a quicker, digital way to transmit test results and vaccination proof. Major U.S. airlines are encouraging travelers to store scans of vaccination documents on smartphones or upload them as they buy tickets.

At present, it appears digital health credentials are more likely to emerge from the private sector or from state governments rather than from the federal government. Privately developed digital health apps for smartphones may become a new innovation in the American travel industry within the next year.<sup>3</sup>

DID YOU KNOW?

Canadians typically have to answer math questions when they enter contests

A national law, the Canadian Competition Act, regulates that contests, lotteries, and sweepstakes based in Canada cannot determine winners solely by luck. There must be some element of skill involved. Therefore, randomly selected winners must correctly answer a skill-testing question, usually a four-part math question, before a prize can be awarded to them. This question is often presented on the contest entry form, as a prerequisite.<sup>4</sup>

ON THE BRIGHT SIDE

In a new GoBankingRates/Upwave poll, 29.2% of baby boomers and 13.9% of Gen Xers report that they are living debt-free or with only insignificant monthly debt.<sup>5</sup>
