Markets:

- The major averages ended a bumpy week on a higher note. The S&P 500 gained 1.1% to end the week higher by 0.6% while the Nasdaq (+1.3%) outperformed, rising 0.9% for the week. Small caps had an even better showing today as the Russell 2000 rose 1.8%, climbing 0.8% for the week. The second day of trade talks between representatives from China and the U.S. started with considerable optimism, which President Trump made sure to highlight in a morning tweet. The first two hours of the session saw an aggressive rally that was paced by cyclical sectors, and briefly lifted the S&P 500 above its high from October 1.
