The Death of Attila

Attila the Hun. Even today the name conjures up images of pillage and destruction. King of the Huns for twenty years, he commanded an army of half a million men, made all of Europe tremble, and threatened to capture Rome itself.

But the terrifying Attila died before he completed his conquest of the civilized world, and it wasn't on the battlefield. It was on his wedding night.

In the year 453, Attila took a new wife: a young girl named Ildico, renowned for her beauty. After a night of drunken revelry in celebration of the wedding, he retired with his bride to the bedchamber, where he promptly passed out on his back.

The following day servants became alarmed when Attila didn't rise at the normal time. After their shouts failed to wake him, they knocked down the door. Inside they found the body of their chieftain sprawled out on the bed beside his weeping bride.

Was he the victim of murder at the hands of his new wife? Not at all. It seems that for all his power and might, the great conqueror had a weakness- he suffered from chronic nosebleeds. One apparently came upon him in his drunken state, and he choked to death.

So it was that one of history's most fearsome warriors died not from a bloody wound but from a bloody nose.

Shortly before he died, Attila was bearing down on Rome with a great army. But Pope Leo I came out to meet with Attila, and convinced him to turn away. People thought it was a miracle, but actually Attila was low on supplies. Two years after Attila's death, another barbarian tribe sacked the city. It was an event so frightening that it burned the name of the attackers into our vocabulary. They were called... the Vandals.

At Attila's funeral, his body was laid out in a silk tent, and horsemen rode in circles around it. Many of his followers gashed their faces so that they would weep blood at his death. His burial party was murdered so that his grave might never be found.

The Markets

It was a good week for stock markets in the United States, but there was trouble in Asia.

U.S. stock markets rallied last week. The Dow Jones Industrial Average, Standard & Poor's 500 Index, and Nasdaq Composite all gained more than 3 percent, reported Ben Levisohn of Barron's.

Investors had plenty of fuel for optimism early in the week. On Sunday, Federal Reserve Chair Jerome Powell struck a positive tone during his 60 Minutes interview stating, "The big thing we have to avoid...is a second wave of the virus. But if we do, then the economy can continue to recover. We'll see GDP move back up after the very low numbers of this quarter. We'll see unemployment come down. But I think though it'll be a while before we really feel well recovered."

On Monday, there was news early testing of a potential vaccine had delivered promising results, and the vaccine company's stock shot higher. The report was tarnished when top executives sold shares the next day, and a respected medical website indicated the published results meant little, reported John Authers in Bloomberg Opinion.

Positive momentum slowed later in the week when China indicated it will impose national security laws on Hong Kong. Reshma Kapadia of Barron's reported, "While the risks have ratcheted higher, it isn't clear yet whether the new security laws will destroy Hong Kong's ability to act as a financial center. What that could mean for investors will probably play out over the next couple of months."

Hong Kong's Hang Seng index closed down 5.6 percent, reported Financial Times (FT). That was the index's worst one-day performance in almost five years.

China's leadership also declined to set a gross domestic product (GDP) target for the first time ever. GDP is the value of all goods and services produced in a nation. The decision led to a decline in mainland China's CSI 300 index of Shanghai and Shenzhen-listed stocks, reported FT.

Data as of 5/22/20	1-Week	Y-T-D	1-Year	3-Year	5-Year	10-Year
Standard & Poor's 500 (Domestic Stocks)	3.2%	-8.5%	3.5%	7.3%	6.8%	10.7%
Dow Jones Global ex-U.S.	2.3	-18.	-10.5	-3.9	-2.7	1.9
10-year Treasury Note (Yield Only)	0.7	NA	2.4	2.3	2.1	3.2
Gold (per ounce)	-0.1	13.8	36.1	11.3	7.6	3.9
Bloomberg Commodity Index	1.8	-22.4	-20.5	-9.7	-9.4	-6.6

Dow Jones Global ex-US, Gold, Bloomberg Commodity Index returns exclude reinvested dividends (gold does not pay a dividend) and the three-, five-, and 10-year returns are annualized; and the 10-year Treasury Note is simply the yield at the close of the day on each of the historical time periods.

HOW IMPORTANT ARE SMALL BUSINESSES? In April, the Federal Reserve Bank of New York (FRBNY) surveyed U.S. small businesses. It reported, late in 2019, before the coronavirus crisis, 35 percent were healthy, 35 percent were stable, 23 percent were at risk, and 6 percent were in distress.

Having a preponderance of healthy and stable small companies is a positive economic sign because, as Lisa Beilfuss of Barron's explained, small companies:

- Employ about 50 percent of American workers
- Produce about 50 percent of U.S. GDP
- Generate 40 percent of total business revenue

Simply put, small businesses are an essential part of the American economy.

The FRBNY survey also noted few small businesses had deep cash reserves. In fact, it estimated just one in five healthy small companies could survive a two-month revenue loss. In such circumstances, "A majority of small businesses would be likely to reduce their workforce and operations, or delay payments. Many firms would rely on personal funds or debt to bridge the gap."

As you might imagine (and may have experienced), the coronavirus crisis has exacted a heavy toll on small businesses. Forty-three percent were temporarily closed by April 2020, according to a survey conducted by the National Bureau of Economic Research (NBER). Others had modified operations to meet social distancing and other COVID-19 safety guidelines.

In an effort to help small businesses, Congress, the President, and the Small Business Administration have passed fiscal stimulus measures. The Federal Reserve is providing monetary stimulus. Despite these efforts, the future of small companies remains uncertain.

Byrne Hobart of The Diff, a newsletter that tracks inflection points in finance and technology, believes diverse outcomes are possible:

"The pessimistic one is front-end corporatization: small businesses just evaporate, their real estate is taken over by big companies, and (some of) their employees find new jobs at these companies...Here's the good one. Those same local businesses are running down their cash reserves, but lenders are banging down the door with a crazy offer: borrow enough to meet payroll now, pay nothing - until business starts coming back... [Lenders get] more involved in the borrower's business - get them good bookkeeping software and a modern point-of-sale system. Band together a bunch of borrowers and start negotiating with suppliers and landlords. In short, use software economics to give small businesses the same economies of scale that large ones already benefit from."

It's possible we could see both situations occur.

Weekly Focus - Think About It

"Now the commencement speakers will typically also wish you good luck and extend good wishes to you. I will not do that, and I'll tell you why. From time to time in the years to come, I hope you will be treated unfairly, so that you will come to know the value of justice...I wish you bad luck, again, from time to time so that you will be conscious of the role of chance in life and understand that your success is not completely deserved and that the failure of others is not completely deserved either...Whether I wish these things or not, they're going to happen. And whether you benefit from them or not will depend upon your ability to see the message in your misfortunes."
