The trading range environment that I have highlighted over the last month or so continues to persist. Most of the major stock market indices are trending up within these well defined ranges and as I write this note this morning, stock market futures are in positive territory pushing the indices to the top end of the range. If the indices are successful at breaking through to new highs in the next few days, it will be an indication that the balance between buyers and sellers has shifted, increasing the probability that we could see a short-term uptrend in the stock market.

With the stock market range bound, I have made no changes to the RGB investment strategies except for a small adjustment to the Core Qualified and Balanced Qualified strategies. While I do not have the final numbers for May yet, it appears that all of the RGB investment strategies have small gains for the month.
