Further details can be found on <http://brokercheck.finra.org>.

Comment: An individual came to me requesting 1031 TIC real estate investment products in early 2008 right before the real estate collapse. I introduced him to my former broker/dealer, Cambridge Investment Research. The individual chose a Minneapolis industrial property that Cambridge offered and had performed due diligence on. After the real estate market collapse, many of the investors of this property filed complaints against their respective broker/dealers. I was NOT a named party in this claim. I was listed only as an interested party as I only made the introduction and have never had a customer complaint from any client in over 22 years of service.

In 2015 Mr. Goodland was found to be in violation of SEC's Investment Advisers Act of 1940, was fined and suspended from acting in a supervisory capacity.

Comment: An advisor I supervised was accumulating a small cap stock for his clients. I hired Cambridge Investment Research as a compliance consultant and they audited us every year as well as set-up e-mail surveillance procedures and never had a problem with this. The SEC took issue with some of the advisors e-mails and the liquidity of the stock. None of the questioned e-mails were ever flagged in the system. I chose to resolve this timely so I could focus on serving my clients so I negotiated a settlement with the SEC. There were never any customer complaints against the advisor, myself or Securus.
