

Whatever It Takes...Takes Nerve

On Thursday, Fed President and FOMC Chairman Jerome Powell spoke at the Jackson Hole Economic Symposium, an annual confab sponsored by the Federal Reserve Bank of Kansas. During his virtual presentation, Powell announced a shift in strategy intended to help achieve the Fed's dual mandate of stable prices and maximum employment. While the Fed reaffirmed a 2% target rate for inflation, Powell added that the Fed would be flexible in adopting monetary policies and strategies geared toward an "average inflation target of 2% over time," thus implying the Committee's comfort in allowing inflation to drift well in excess of 2% for extended periods. The news in itself should be no surprise, as just days earlier, one of the Fed's most hawkish policymakers, Kansas City Fed President Esther George, hinted at such a move. But what was surprising of today's announcement was the timing. Most market participants expected this move to come at the Fed's next FOMC meeting in September.

Ok, what does all this mean, and why should I care? Well, in our opinion, today's policy shift suggests that the Federal Reserve is willing to do whatever it takes to keep interest rates lower for longer, in an attempt to resuscitate economic growth and help drag Main Street from the grasps of potential depression. This may be especially true as Washington remains in gridlock as it relates to additional COVID stimulus. Stocks initially rallied on today's Federal Reserve news, and then fell back down. We believe today's price action suggests that while lower rates are initially good for stocks, the need to utilize larger and larger counter-measures implies the economy may be more challenged than the record-setting equity markets would lead you to believe. Hence this is the main reason the Fed announced these moves now, rather than waiting until mid-September.

But just as investors began to rationalize the inconceivable – that economic fundamentals may not be supportive of record-high index levels (driven mostly by 5 or 6 companies), Mr. Market latched on to perceived even better news. Just a few hours earlier, Abbott Labs (ticker: ABT) issued a press release announcing that the US Food and Drug Administration approved its 15-minute rapid COVID-19 test. And what's more, it costs only $5 per test. Then news outlets began to report that President Trump will announce a \$750 million deal with ABT to purchase 150 million tests. In our opinion, the advent of a cheap and rapid COVID test could have wide-spread positive ramifications for colleges, professional sports, restaurants, and the travel/leisure industry. And while there remain reliability concerns regarding antigen and/or serological tests, this didn't seem to stop the bid for equities, led by the most badly beaten sectors. For example, investors witnessed a 5.98% rise in shares of Royal Caribbean, and welcome moves in other companies including Norwegian Cruise Lines (NCLH, +5.92%), United Airlines (UAL, +5.75%), Carnival Cruise (CCL, +5.50%), Marriot (MAR, +4.41%), American Airlines (AAL, +3.87), MGM Resorts (MGM+3.73%) and Darden (DRI, +3.66%). What's more is that we also witnessed a pullback in most of the FAANGMs, with Microsoft being the day's only gainer, up 2.5%, with this group down about 0.7% overall, suggesting a potential rotation and widening of breadth. But one day does not make a trend.

So as of Thursday's close, the S&P 500 is now up almost 8% YTD and has recovered by over 50% from the March lows. But at the same time, initial claims recorded another 1 million-plus week, and consumer confidence missed expectations, American Airlines announced the elimination of an additional 19k jobs next month, while United will furlough an additional 2,859 starting October 1, 2020. CNBC reported earlier this month that 50% of furloughed workers don't expect a job to return to, and NYC unemployment remains close to 20%. We are far from the economic strength from late 2019, and yet the market has already discounted its return. Call us what you want, a perma-bear, chicken-little, or maybe just early. Only time will tell.

We remain guarded, despite the modest reprieve offered in Thursday's news. As we pointed in our note a couple weeks back entitled, "Do Stocks Ever Go Down," negative real rates will increase asset values given a lack of alternatives in risk-free bonds. And this latest move by the Fed will just continue to test investor's nerve, as implicit in the strategy shift, is the notion that the Fed is also willing to pump up asset values to unwarranted levels. This is the silent risk that many investors may be unaware of.

We are taking next week off, so look for us to return in September. We hope to provide some new ideas and positioning, and maybe even a new bi-weekly format.

We'd love to hear your thoughts.

Disclosure: The information in this publication and references to specific securities, asset classes and financial markets are provided for illustrative purposes and do not constitute an offer to sell, or solicitation of an offer to purchase, any securities, nor does they constitute an endorsement with respect to any investment area or vehicle. This material serves to provide general information to clients and is not meant to be legal or tax advice for any particular investor, which can only be provided by qualified tax and legal counsel. Certain information contained herein is based on outside sources believed to be reliable, but its accuracy is not guaranteed. Investment products (other than deposit products) referenced in this material are not insured by the FDIC (or any other state or federal agency), are not deposits of or guaranteed by Northeast Private Client Group, and are subject to investment risk, including the loss of principal amount invested. Portfolios are subject to investment risks, including possible loss of the principal amount invested. In addition, foreign investments may be less liquid, more volatile and less subject to governmental supervision than in the United States. The values of foreign securities can be affected by changes in currency rates, application of foreign tax laws, changes in governmental administration and economic and monetary policy. Investors should consider the investment objectives, risks, charges, and expenses of ETFs carefully before investing. This and other information are contained in the fund's prospectus, which may be obtained from your investment professional. Please read it before you invest. Investments in ETFs are subject to risk, including possible loss of the principal amount invested. This information is being provided to current Northeast Private Client Group clients and should not be further distributed without Northeast Private Client Group's approval. S&P 500 Index is a market index generally considered representative of the stock market as a whole. The index focuses on the large-cap segment of the U.S. equities market. Dow Jones Industrial Average is a widely used indicator of the overall condition of the stock market, a price-weighted average of 30 actively traded blue chip stocks, primarily industrials, but also includes financial, leisure and other service-oriented firms. Russell 2000 Index measures the performance of the smallest 2,000 companies in the Russell 3000 Index of the 3,000 largest U.S. companies in terms of market capitalization. NASDAQ Composite Index is a market value-weighted index that measures all NASDAQ domestic and non-U.S. based common stocks listed on the NASDAQ stock market. Each company's security affects the index in proportion to its market value. This commentary contains forward-looking statements and projections. Actual results may differ from current expectations based on a number of factors including but not limited to changing market conditions, leverage and underlying asset performance. Northeast Private Client Group makes no representation or warranty, express or implied that this information shall be relied upon as a promise or representation regarding past or future performance. This material contains the current opinions of the author but not necessarily those of Guardian or its subsidiaries and such opinions are subject to change without notice. Past performance is not a guarantee of future results. Indices are unmanaged, and one cannot invest directly in an index. Data and rates used were indicative of market conditions as of the date shown. Opinions, estimates, forecasts, and statements of financial market trends are based on current market conditions and are subject to change without notice. Securities products and advisory services offered through Park Avenue Securities LLC (PAS), member FINRA, SIPC. OSJ: 200 Broadhollow Road Suite 405, Melville, NY 11747, 631-589-5400. PAS is a wholly-owned subsidiary of The Guardian Life Insurance Company of America® (Guardian), New York, NY. Northeast Private Client Group is not an affiliate or subsidiary of PAS or Guardian. 2020-107691 Exp. 11/20